All,

I am writing to share an updated school year calendar to reflect revised/draft adjustments through December 23, 2020. This version incorporates our current models of learning. To be more specific, the revised/draft calendar has the following adjustments;

1. Our revised draft only targeted schooling through December 23, 2020. The calendar from that point on has not been adjusted with the exception of the ending dates due to the movement of two full-day professional development days originally populated in the first half of the school year through December 23, 2020.
2. November 3, 2020 was previously identified as a full-day educator professional development day with no students. That day has been reassigned as a full remote learning day.
3. Due to the nature of our current hybrid learning program, early release days have been removed with the exception of the day before Thanksgiving, November 23, 2020 and the day before the winter holiday vacation, December 23, 2020. Both days are currently designated as independent learning half days.
4. The educator professional development days were revised/drafted to the days after the 2020-2021 school year ends Tuesday, June 15, but those are regarded as flex days that could be repopulated in the school year for shifts or transitions to other forms of learning during this school year.

We will continue to provide long range planning to the best of our ability. While we have had minor relief from day-to-day planning, it is still with the risk of change. We will ask for a formal School Committee vote in the next month or so as we better understand our short-term and long-term school community future.

Respectfully,

Steven M. Lamarche

Superintendent of Schools
